

1.2.1 Data without permission

During the data collection process, not all communication partners in all the chats gave their permission for their texts to be used. In chats where we did not get the permission, we still used the texts by the other communication partner (who did give their permission) and disguised texts without permission.

In order to keep the chats more or less readable, we decided to still give some information about the disguised messages, i.e. their length. Disguised messages are thus marked as e.g. redactedQ12tokens55characters. This annotation lets you know that the original message consisted of 55 characters that formed 12 tokens.
